Introduction

Racial ostracism ... extended to churches and schools, to housing and jobs, to eating and drinking. Whether by law or by custom, that ostracism eventually extended to virtually all forms of public transportation, to sports and recreation, to hospitals, orphanages, prisons, and asylums, and ultimately to funeral homes, morgues, and cemeteries.

Garner v. Louisiana (1961)

In this book, one will discover more than legal issues. Each case tells a part of the unfolding story of race and the law in America. People of color—African, Asian, Native American, and Latino—have made these cases a testament to courage, tenacity, and a belief in justice for all. The vast majority of cases involve African-Americans.¹ This is rightly so because African-Americans fought more legal battles over a greater length of time. They fought battles, for centuries, against unfathomable legal obstacles. The cases and controversies presented here speak to the determination of all people intent on being free.

Each incremental step toward full citizenship was a hard-fought struggle against societal racism codified into law. The law was utilized to maintain racial differences and remove people of color from economic, political, and social competition. Laws were enacted to
